Wartburg College 1994-95 President's Report

A Chapter Ends as the Wartburg Story Continues

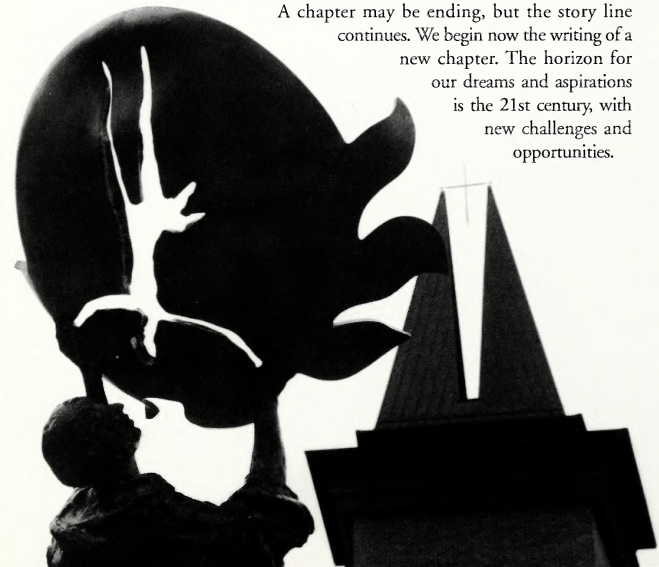
The drizzle began as Paul Granlund was describing his creation of "Dancing St. Francis," the exciting sculpture that is now the centerpiece of Wartburg's new entrance and courtyard. There we were, huddled in the rain, enthralled with the design of the newly unveiled St. Francis. Looking around, we felt good about ourselves and the college. We liked what we saw.

What we saw were visible signs of Wartburg's progress over the past decade: A Fine Arts Center, a Communication Arts Center, a Chapel, and now a new Classroom Technology Center—all tied together by skyways and courtyard. What we felt was a deeper sense of appreciation for developments less visible but every bit as significant. And we felt good because we knew it was all coming together.

With the feeling of accomplishment was also a sense that a chapter was coming to a close—a very important chapter in Wartburg's history. This chapter's formal beginning was May 1988, when the Board of Regents adopted the long-range plan, "The Decade of Opportunity."

Interestingly enough then, the "decade" lasted only seven years. Some of the achievements are described in more detail in the report that follows. We draw this chapter to a close with thanks and appreciation to those who made it happen through their efforts, their prayers, and their financial support.

A chapter may be ending, but the story line continues. We begin now the writing of a new chapter. The horizon for our dreams and aspirations is the 21st century, with new challenges and opportunities.



George Dehne, who has been consulting with the college, believes that distinctiveness will be the measure of whether a college will flourish or struggle for survival. Dehne's paper, "A Look at the Future of the Private College," has been a catalyst for our discussion. Dehne has identified specific institutional issues Wartburg needs to address as we set goals and priorities for the years ahead.

While the title for this new chapter in Wartburg's history is yet to be determined, I believe "distinctiveness" will be part of it. Building on the strengths we have, the college must find ways to add value to academic and co-curricular programs and communicate that value to a new generation of prospective students and friends.

We know a meaningful life is not segmented. So, too, education should be of a single piece. For generations, this has been true at Wartburg. In a remarkable way, things fit together in the Wartburg experience.

The leadership emphasis, cultural immersion experiences, the focus on the future, and our commitment to faith, values, and good citizenship—these are "points of difference" that make the Wartburg experience distinctive and distinguish Wartburg's educational opportunities from other schools. Wartburg's commitment to students is to provide both theoretical and practical learning opportunities, helping students put head, hands, and heart together.

The next months will be filled with conversations about the future of Wartburg College. We know that endowment for scholarships and a new library for the 21st century will be major priorities. These next years will be full of excitement. You are invited to be a part of it.

Convocation opens academic year

Wartburg's Opening Convocation included the dedication of Dancing St. Francis, a sculpture by Paul Granlund that is the centerpiece of the new campus courtyard. This view of the ceremony was taken from the skywalk connecting the Wartburg Chapel and the Fine Arts Center. Also dedicated at ceremonies this fall were the Classroom Technology Center, the new Grossmann Hall, and the Pool of Remembrance outside the Wartburg Chapel.

About the cover

The expansive new vista at the south end of the Wartburg College campus extends across the front and back covers of this issue. The view includes, from front to back, the Fine Arts Center, the skywalk, the Wartburg Chapel, and the Classroom Technology Center, which is anchored to Luther Hall.

"If you had come to visit us in 1988," says President Robert Vogel, "and then came back today, you would, I think, be surprised."

"When alumni see what's happened here in the last four or five years," adds Dr. Richard Torgerson, vice president for development, "they're blown away. It's a whole new scene, not just in buildings but in programs as well."

Seven years ago, Wartburg College launched a strategic plan called "The Decade of Opportunity." The plan aimed to enrich the educational experience Wartburg offers its students and enhance the college's reputation for excellence. Among the initiatives it called for were developing a leadership emphasis within the academic program, expanding global outreach, enriching the arts, encouraging worship and faith expression, and providing needed facilities and equipment.

Since 1988, Wartburg has:

- established 10 endowed chairs and professorships;
- built a new Fine Arts Center;
- developed the R.J. McElroy Communication Arts Center;
- built a new chapel;
- built a Classroom Technology Center;
- built the new Grossmann Hall residence facility; and
- completed various special projects, including the purchase of sophisticated laboratory equipment for the natural sciences and the establishment of a symbolic computation laboratory in mathematics.

"We deliberately set no overall fund-raising goal, in terms of a dollar amount," says Vogel. "We wanted to work toward fulfilling our mission, project by project. In general, we thought meeting these goals might require $15 million or $20 million over 10 years. No one expected that we'd raise more than $30 million in seven years.

"That's why we can say our decade is over, after only seven years. We've accomplished nearly all that we set out to accomplish. Now there will be new initiatives"

A New Look and a New Outlook

In seven years, the Decade of Opportunity has produced striking changes in the appearance of Wartburg's campus, changes even a casual visitor would notice. "The South Campus Project has given Wartburg a front door," says Fred Hagemann, chair of the Board of Regents. "This will forever change the all-important first impression any visitor has of the college. We now make a very good first impression."

If you stop to ask Wartburg students, faculty members, and administrators how recent developments have affected them, you come to see how the Decade of Opportunity has also changed the college community's outlook.

Teaching Students to Take the Lead

As director of the newly endowed program in leadership education, Dr. Fred Waldstein has been a key player in developing a leadership emphasis at Wartburg.

The effort has earned national attention, in part because of the college's unique approach. "We define leadership as taking responsibility for our communities and making them better through public action," Waldstein explains. "Our principal focus is to convince students that they can make real contributions to their communities. We want our graduates to be responsible citizens, not just people who get jobs and succeed at the personal, private level. Personal success is important, but it's not enough."

To provide ways for students to put this definition into practice, leadership education at Wartburg offers four kinds of experiences:

1. Skill development and self-awareness workshops, which have been combined with efforts to connect first-year students to the campus community;

2. A mentoring program, which pairs students with community leaders in the region on a year-long basis;

3. Academic course work, including Waldstein's popular leadership theories and practice course, as well as a renewed emphasis on leadership in the person and society general education course;

4. Community outreach, where Waldstein works individually with students who are engaged in specific projects.

According to Waldstein, the impact of these new opportunities has been far-reaching: "As an example, one student, for his required community service project in the leadership theories course, decided his church basement needed painting. After we talked about what that might do in terms of his leadership development, he decided to get some of the young people in the church involved. To make a long story short, he ended up becoming the founder of a youth group in his church.

"How do you calculate the multiplier effect of that kind of activity?"

For Christine Nath, a '95 graduate, leadership education was a highlight of her learning experience at Wartburg. "When I took the leadership theories and practice class during my senior year," she recalls, "I also was working as a student intern in marketing at the Iowa Plastics Technology Center. As a matter of fact, I did all the marketing for the center, and the class really helped me define how I wanted to develop the program.

"As a result of that experience, a whole world of opportunity has opened for me. For one thing, the center hired me full-time after I graduated; but even more than that, my whole understanding of leadership has changed. I had to focus on my own leadership capabilities, on where I need to go and what I need to develop further. Now I know that leadership and learning are lifelong processes.

"One of the most important things Wartburg does is to develop your whole person. It goes far beyond the classes—which are important—but when you step out into the real world, it's a lot different from sitting in class. I had a great experience here."

Meeting Other Cultures Where They Live

During the past seven years, the Global and Multicultural Studies Program has evolved into a significant and distinctive emphasis at Wartburg, overseeing a wide range of off-campus experiences for students and faculty and sponsoring co-curricular programs to enhance intercultural relationships on campus.

"What's distinctive is our focus on cultural immersion," says Dr. Janice Yee, co-director of the program. "Most colleges offer some sort of overseas study opportunity, where students may travel to other countries. From the beginning, we have gone a step further, encouraging students and faculty to become involved at a grassroots level in whatever off-campus site they're located—whether that's a village in Tanzania, a Hispanic-American community in Denver, or wherever they may go.

"We want them to get to know the culture, rather than simply observe it."

The general rubric for Wartburg's off-campus experiences is "Venture Education." Opportunities include semester-long service/learning programs in Tanzania, Jamaica, England, and Wartburg West in Denver, Colo. Students also may choose to study abroad for a year or a term in Japan, France, Germany, Spain, Mexico, China, England, Israel, Brazil, Indonesia, and Turkey.

During the four-week May Term, Wartburg regularly offers classes that involve immersion experiences in such locations as Guyana, Palestine, Guatemala, El Salvador, England, France, Germany, Mexico, and Tanzania.

Co-director Kim Folkers cites the active involvement of academic departments as another strength of the Global and Multicultural Studies Program: "The departments bring these opportunities into being. They create the courses, make the connections, and come to us with the plans they would like to implement. Our role is to publicize and facilitate, to make it easier for students and professors to engage in cultural immersions."

"One of the most important things Wartburg does is to develop your whole person. It goes far beyond the classes—which are important—but when you step out into the real world, it's a lot different from sitting in class. I had a great experience here."

As a result, Wartburg students take part in off-campus experiences that are both academically and personally rewarding.

"I was in Tanzania for three months last year," says Sarah Woodard, a senior English/secondary education major from Lindsborg, Kan. "I taught English as a second language to students at a secondary school there, helping especially with the students who were struggling most. At the same time, I visited Masai villages to study how Christianity is practiced in Tanzania, took an interdisciplinary credit in contemporary Tanzanian culture, and started learning Swahili.

"Living there has helped me understand what I value. It's made me aware of how important my own spiritual life is to me. I also know that I want to travel more and, when I become a teacher, to encourage my students to look at different cultures and to learn from them."

Kevin Dempsey, a senior international business/computer information systems/Spanish studies major from Jesup, Iowa, is equally enthusiastic about his cultural immersion experiences in Mexico and Spain: "I went to Cuernavaca, Mexico, for a May Term and then spent a semester at the Center for Cross-Cultural Studies in Seville, Spain. Both times, I lived with a host family, rather than with other American students.

"I learned a lot of Spanish because I was speaking it all the time. Also, through living with my host families and interacting with people on the street, I gained an understanding of the Mexican and Spanish societies and the way they see things. It changes your perspective. It makes you think about the way things are here in the United States, too."

According to Yee and Folkers, the endowed chair in Global and Multicultural Studies has helped bring focus to cultural immersion experiences. They estimate that 100 to 150 Wartburg students take part in Venture Education experiences each year.

A New Home for the Fine Arts

With the completion of the new Fine Arts Center, Wartburg's Art and Music departments moved into a facility that enhances the reputation for quality these programs had already achieved.

The result has been increased interest, across the campus, in the course offerings, degree programs, and performance opportunities centered in the new building.

"When I came here in 1989," says Ted Reuter, chair of the Music Department, "we had about 68 majors. This fall, we're between 105 and 110—over half again the previous number. We also have far more students who take lessons and who are involved in the various ensembles. The choir, band, and orchestra are as large or larger than they've ever been. We even have more non-majors taking music courses just because they're interested and they know the courses will be good."

To account for these increases, Reuter cites a number of factors: "Like other programs on this campus, the Music Department has developed a strong regional reputation because of our touring ensembles and because of our graduates who are out there doing good work. These things have a snowball effect."

Then there's the new building: "It's really a very fine facility. The classrooms are good. The studios for applied lessons are large and attractive, and they contain excellent equipment. The practice rooms have good pianos. We have a recording studio with digital recording capability and a very functional electronic music lab.

"Our students realize they are in an environment where professionalism is important."

Dr. Paul Torkelson, director of the Wartburg Choir, agrees and points also to the impact the Fine Arts Center has had on recruiting: "Prospective students are very conscious of facilities. When we were in the old building, it was a lot more difficult for us to sell the music program, simply because the facility looked outdated.

"Now the whole atmosphere has changed. It's just been amazing. Among both faculty and students, there is a sense of pride about what has happened here and the direction we're going. I don't know how you assess the psychological impact of a building, but I believe it reflects in the energy level you find here—in the attitude of the students and the teaching of the faculty."

Outside groups have come to appreciate the new Fine Arts Center, too. "For the last three years," reports Reuter, "we have hosted junior high, high school, and collegiate music competitions sponsored by the Music Teachers National Association. We could never have hosted events like this five years ago. Now these groups ask to come here—and when they've been here once, they're even more eager to come back."

A Renaissance in Communication Arts

In May 1992, the Communication Arts Department moved into its remodeled and newly equipped facility, the R.J. McElroy Communication Arts Center. Since then, the program has blossomed. New curricular offerings, increased enrollments, and hands-on opportunities for students are all now part of the communication arts scene at Wartburg.

"When I was a student here," muses assistant professor Shelly Green, an '87 graduate and now faculty adviser to the Trumpet and Fortress, "journalism was in Neumann House, and all we had were typewriters, some of them manual. It wasn't that long ago.

"Now, in the new Journalism Lab, we're working with Power PCs, pagination, and a tabloid-size printer that prints out the pages as they're laid out. We're even taking some publications on-line. It's been a phenomenal change."

Another phenomenal change has been the expansion of broadcasting into a full-fledged electronic media track within the communication arts major. Grant Price, executive-in-residence, describes what has happened: "Ten years ago, television didn't exist at Wartburg, and the radio program was very limited. When we moved to the new facility, the radio station came out of Players Theatre into a space that was designed for a radio station, and we installed all-new equipment in the on-air studio.

"The new television production studio allows us to produce programs live or to tape. We can use the facility for classes, and students can gain hands-on experience through our news production team. The equipment is all new as of four years ago. It's pretty much state-of-the-art for current television news department practice.

"So we've changed the curriculum to reflect the new capabilities we have with this facility. We now offer, in addition to print and public relations, an electronic media emphasis that combines radio production, television production, corporate video, and more."

Students have found the new facility and the revitalized program very appealing. Price cites a 50 percent increase in the number of new communication arts majors over last year.

What's more, these students are benefiting from experiences that make Wartburg's communication arts program a leader in its field. Senior communication arts major Kirsten Johnson of Ames, Iowa, spent a semester in Sydney, Australia, and did her internship at a television station there. "The producer told me I must have had a good experience at my college because I knew a lot more than some of his employees. During the time I spent there, I was always looking back to things I'd learned here."

As another example, Green mentions a recent graduate who had an internship at CNBC in Washington, D.C., where her responsibilities included editing tape for a news broadcast: "Her supervisor told her that none of the previous interns had edited tape. None of them had known how, so the station didn't let them do that kind of thing. But we can teach our students those skills here."

Hands-on learning in the new Communication Arts Center gives Wartburg students a competitive edge when they enter the job market. "It's a real advantage," says Price, "when you walk in that news director's door for the first time to be able to say, 'I know how to write. I know how to edit tape. Yes, I can shoot video.' These are practical advantages that many large universities cannot offer."

"Now the chapel tells everyone who we are. It's a real witness. It says, loud and clear, we are a church-related place. Worship is important here."

A New Place for Worship

The centerpiece of capital improvements at Wartburg, in many respects, has been the Wartburg Chapel. Dedicated in the fall of 1994, the chapel has exceeded the expectations even of those most closely involved in its planning and design.

"To be frank," says campus pastor Larry Trachte, "I was somewhat skeptical when planning for the chapel began. I have always believed you can worship anywhere; God is not confined to a building. So how much difference could a chapel make?

"Now I know. This space has literally transformed the tone and spirit of worship on campus. Anytime we get together now, it's a celebration.

"Before, in Neumann Auditorium, we used to start big for chapel, but as the semester wore on, attendance would dwindle. Last year, instead of dwindling, attendance grew. We had more and more people coming to chapel.

"So we started the Wednesday night Eucharist, a candlelight communion service led by students with guitar and piano accompaniment. It's fun, upbeat, celebratory. Those of us who are part of the experience are uplifted by it. It's just a great spiritual expression. And student attendance has been very good."

Students involved in campus ministry have also noticed the change. "I can't explain how it happened," says senior Michael Stadtmueller of Seguin, Texas, vice president of the Campus Ministry organization, "but we're a lot more vocal now. The chapel went up, and all of a sudden, everyone is excited about Campus Ministry. They're talking about it. They're trying to get people involved.

"I used to feel like I belonged to a small group. Now it seems like everyone's here. I'm not lonely anymore."

According to Trachte, the new chapel has turned out to be everything its planners had hoped for—and more. "We told the architect early on that we wanted intimacy—and we also wanted transcendence. We wanted a modern building, but we also wanted it to reflect our tradition, a tie to our roots. We wanted it to seat 100, and we also wanted it to seat 500.

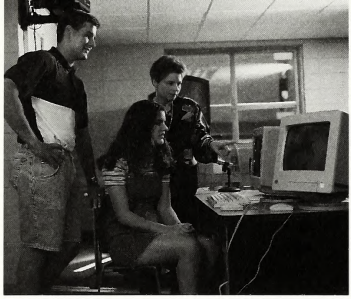
"And he did it. The space works beautifully. We get intimacy because of the balconies and the benches around the perimeter. For Wednesday night Eucharist, we can dim the lights and have closeness. Then on Family Weekend, we can seat 550 people in there.

"And the singing! Students love singing, and there's no better place to sing on campus. Even I sound good in there.

"And the light! Neumann had no windows, but here you can look out and see the clouds or the blue sky. It's just a beautiful setting for worship."

From the outside, the chapel serves as a prominent expression of Wartburg's connection to the church. "For a long time," explains Trachte, "we've had an unabashed commitment to being a college of the church. We've articulated it. We've said it. We've had the programs. But it's kind of like trying to have a good football team without a football field.

"Now the chapel tells everyone who we are. It's a real witness. It says, loud and clear, we are a church-related place. Worship is important here."



"We're using technology as it ought to be used—not as an end in itself, but as a tool for learning in a different way."

A New Place to Learn and a New Place to Live

The last two major building projects from the Decade of Opportunity—the Classroom Technology Center and the new Grossmann Hall—were completed this fall. Both have generated considerable enthusiasm among the campus community, but their actual impact is yet to be assessed.

Originally conceived as a lecture hall, the new classroom complex connects Luther Hall and the chapel. It has evolved into a forward-looking facility designed to encourage the integration of technology into teaching and learning.

"In one of the classrooms," says Dr. James Pence, academic dean, "the professor can use a touch-screen computer to project images from videotape, satellite TV signal, CD-ROM, or computer. The goal is to create a teaching space that provides an efficient way to use technology in learning.

"Another classroom can be used for collaborative learning with computers. Individual, high-speed, multimedia workstations provide enough network capacity so that groups of students can work together on a common problem."

The Classroom Technology Center also houses a fiber-optic, interactive video classroom for distance-learning programs. International students use the classroom for English as a second language courses taught by professors at Drake University in Des Moines. Wartburg cello students use the room for lessons with a master cellist in Des Moines.

Pence expects that faculty members will find different ways to use the new facilities, corresponding to their teaching styles.

Dr. Terrence Lindell, associate professor of history, envisions a multimedia lecture approach: "I had already been using images from a laser disc as a teaching tool in American history, although the old technology was cumbersome. With the new facility, I can combine still images with audio and video clips. For example, I can play a song, display the lyrics, and bring up historical images that relate to the song and the lyrics—and control them all with the touch of a button."

Dr. Peggy Pruisner, associate professor of education, hopes the new facility will enable her to redefine her teaching role: "The technology allows you to step away from being the expert in the classroom, the deliverer of knowledge, and to become a facilitator of learning. If students have to deliver a project using HyperCard, for example, the technology itself forces them to clarify their ideas and their position. At the same time, it creates occasions for one-to-one discussion between each student and me."

"What really excites me about this whole project," says Dean Pence, "is that we're using technology as it ought to be used—not as an end in itself, but as a tool for learning in a different way. "

Meanwhile, in another part of campus, the first residents are living in the new Grossmann Hall. With room for 188 students, the new residence hall has increased the college's overall housing capacity; but Peter Armstrong, director of residential life, hopes it will do even more.

"Where old Grossmann had a traditional corridor arrangement, the new building has suites with four, three, or two bedrooms. It's easier for students to connect with the kind of group where they feel most comfortable.

"We saw this as an opportunity. The suite arrangement encourages groups of students to interact in a particular way. So, as returning students applied to live in the new Grossmann, we asked them to come together with a common educational theme.

"For example, one suite has four guys who share a career goal of working with children. One wants to be a pediatrician, another wants to be a social worker, and the other two want to be teachers. They're taking different classes, but when they come back from class, they can talk about how their different experiences tie together.

"Other groups share an interest in music or in campus ministries. For the first-year students, we tried to cluster them based on common courses. We're very interested to see what kind of impact this will have."

What's Next?

New challenges and new opportunities lie ahead. According to President Vogel, Wartburg's next decade will see a concentrated effort to increase endowment support for scholarships and the construction of a 21st-century library.

"We will continue our efforts to become a more distinctive, stronger institution," he says. "At the same time, we need to keep finding ways to communicate the value of what we have already accomplished together."

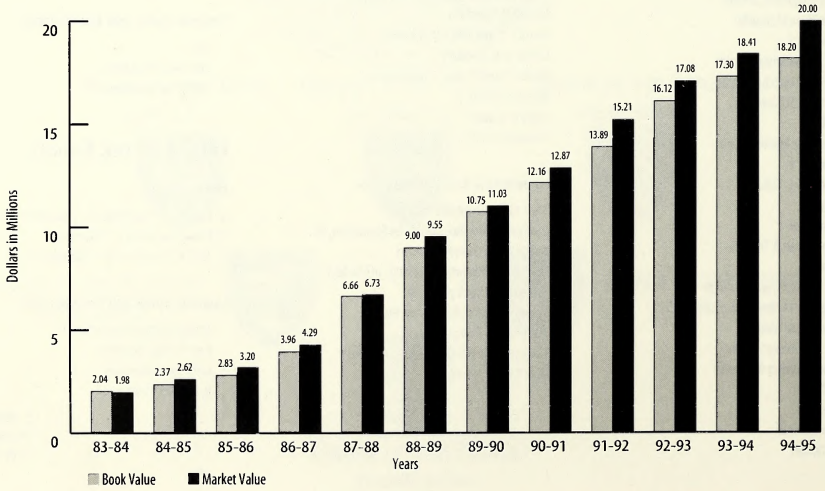
Endowment History



Heritage Club Membership

The Heritage Club has been a major factor in building Wartburg's growing endowment. Endowment is the college's capital. Endowment secures the college's future: the quality of teaching and scholarship, the support of qualified students, and the aesthetic character and appearance of the campus. And in an important sense, endowment provides Wartburg with its most significant asset—the freedom to act upon its vision in funding programs, activities, and services that bring the college a distinctive spirit.

The endowment's market value reached more than $20 million in May 1995. Heritage Club membership now exceeds 906 individuals who represent 561 families. Some members have chosen to remain anonymous.

You can continue to make a difference for Wartburg now and in the future by joining this committed group of people who care about the college. To be enrolled in the Heritage Club, let us know that you have made provision for a future gift to Wartburg. Examples of such gifts include wills, bequests, life estate plans, trust arrangements, life insurance, charitable gift annuities, and the establishment of an endowed scholarship or restricted endowment.

We hope you will choose to be a member of the Heritage Club.

The Wartburg Chapel's Zimmerman Tower, graphic symbol of the Tower Club, defines Wartburg College from several perspectives. To the alumni whose names appear in this report, we say thank you. One of the marks of a distinctive college of quality is the percentage of alumni contributing annually to support the college's mission and vision. At Wartburg, the roll of alumni includes those who have attended the college for at least one year. In 1994-95, 14 percent of non-degreed alumni and 38 percent of degreed alumni provided support for the college.

The roll of alumni donors on the following pages includes the total amount contributed by each class, including both unrestricted and restricted or designated gifts. With your continuing support, we will achieve and sustain our goal of 40 percent annual alumni participation.
